The Class of 1879

IT is twenty years since Seventy-nine was graduated. Time enough for us to have done something in the world—at least sufficient to make it interesting to compare notes and see how we stand and what each man's prospects are in the struggle for existence. For some the struggle is over, and while we regret that the end came soon in cases where the promise of accomplishment was excellent, let us reflect that our horizon is limited and our standard of comparison very imperfect and that it has been said Melior est patiens viro forti, et qui dominatur animo suo expugnatore urbium.

As we glance over the records the old life seems so fresh that it is hard to realize that the changed conditions at Pennsylvania have been brought about in so short a time. In fact, as well as in name, our Alma Mater is much the oldest of American universities. The wisest of Americans was our founder, and it makes little practical difference whether the author of the famous "Proposals Relating to the Education of Youth in Pennsylvania" could have fully developed the plan which he outlined, for he picked out one who was capable of doing it, and gave us the man to whom the life of the University is due. Franklin's own position later was positively hostile, though a Pennsylvania professor has seen fit in an official publication to speak as though he had been our constant champion and supporter.

He may have objected, as he said he did, to the importance given to the study of the classics. But there was a stronger reason for his antagonism to Provost Smith, who was the ablest champion of the proprietary interest in the province after James Logan's death. The College was the stronghold of the aristocratic party, and Franklin was the leader of the popular party. The College was disliked, and when the Revolutionary struggle began, although the College was on the popular side several of the trustees were Tories and many more were suspected of Toryism, and her enemies saw and used their opportunity. She was despoiled of her property and robbed of her influence in 1779, and the first of many abortive attempts was made in America to legislate a University into existence, by creating a rival institution—the University of the State of Pennsylvania—and endowing it with the property of the College. It was the first time an institution in English-speaking America was called a University, and the attempt to found it by confiscation made further attempts along the same lines impossible if a late writer on the Federal Constitution is correct in assigning the origin of the clause prohibiting the passage by the States of laws impairing the obligation of contracts to the experience of the College of Philadelphia.

Restitution came in 1789, and reconciliation and affiliation with the legislative creation in 1791, under the present charter of the University of Pennsylvania. But the great Provost who had created the University was set aside, and never ruled over it under the new name. For nearly a century the College suffered, though the University flourished, and it was more than a century before the number of students in the College caught up with and passed the number in the Medical School.

The College became little more than a local institution of excellent but limited reputation and influence. The reaction began under Provost Stillé and the third period in our history dates from the removal to West Philadelphia, and the new spirit infused into the institution.

Seventy-three was the first class to be graduated after the removal. Seventy-five projected (in Philo), and Seventy-six established, the University Magazine. Seventy-seven founded the Athletic Association in our freshman year. When Seventy-nine was matriculated the new life was fairly begun, and Seventy-nine entered into it heartily and helped it mightily, as a brief outline of our college history will show.

The first sensation of freshman year was in relation to the Bowl-fight—Pennsylvania's "peculiar institution." Jefferys, then in Seventy-eight, had been bowlman the year before, and had nearly had his brains knocked out on the steps (he will surely pardon this account in our private memoirs, though one of the arguments he urged against the custom was that the publicity occasioned by the position would be fatal to the victim's prospects in after life). At the opening of the term he printed and circulated a pamphlet attacking the custom, which led to acrimonious discussion in the Magazine, for his supporters, though not numerous, were enthusiastic. But the fight took place as usual and the next year Seventy-nine produced a bowl which, for the first time, was preserved unbroken, and the custom continued with more or less opposition on the part of the Faculty until fifteen years later when Horace Jayne, as Dean, by artfully recognizing and regulating it took most of the old snap and vigor out of it, and thus accomplished what his predecessors had failed to do.

During this year an effort was made to establish college prayer-meetings. It is interesting to read the controversy in the columns of the Magazine and the arguments in opposition, not to taking part in them, but to allowing them to be held, on the ground that they were in bad taste, that the chapel services furnished all the religious stimulus the students required, that they were a travesty on religion, and their promoters actuated by the unworthy motive of securing professorial approval. The champion of the reformers was a freshman, and certainly held his own in argument, and manifested a cheerful readiness to test the matter by force of arms if need were, and his terse and pointed epigram that if they chose to try it his opponents would find that "Muscle is not incompatible with Christianity" was quoted in college for many a day after Pike left us.

In sophomore year Edwards and Dechert were the movers in the introduction of Cremation, borrowed from other colleges, and, in spite of the disapproval of the older classes, immensely successful and at once established as a "fixture" at Pennsylvania. In this year Britton organized the University Orchestra, which he conducted successfully until his graduation.

In the spring of sophomore year took place the first boat race ever rowed by University of Pennsylvania crews, made more interesting, says the Magazine, by the fact that the contest was really between the senior and sophomore classes, all but one of the crew of the University Club being seniors, while the crew of the College Club consisted of Hunt, Stewart, Kennedy and Hart. The sophomores were victorious and when Hunt was unable to stand training and Bond of Seventy-seven had taken his place this became the University Crew and two years later defeated Columbia and Princeton in the first race for the Childs Cup.

This year Lee's athletic triumphs began—modestly, with two seconds in the fall sports, followed by four firsts in the spring sports and three firsts at the Inter-Collegiate meeting at Mott Haven, a record never excelled. In the next year he took seven out of twelve firsts in the fall, and the Magazine having sarcastically suggested that the name of the association be changed to the Lee Athletic Society he did not compete in the spring games, but took two firsts and a second at Mott Haven. There has been a great change in athletics. In the present day the most promising of three thousand students are selected by experts and trained with no saving of expense to excel in various lines. Twenty years ago those who were enthusiastic enough of the three hundred college students did their own training under very adverse conditions, and at their own expense. As to popular encouragement, the Magazine recorded it as a remarkable sign of interest that "full three hundred people" attended the fall games in 1877.

Jefferys, after a year's absence from college, joined Seventy-nine in junior year. The year had been spent in meditation, and he was prepared to revolutionize college teaching. Didactic instruction was a mistake. The faculty had knowledge which the students lacked, and the reasonable way to proceed was for the student to question the professor—ask for what he wanted. Let us adopt the Socratic method, wrote Jefferys in the Magazine. The conservatives were alarmed and replied at length. They argued that the class-rooms would be disorderly; the quicker or more alert students would monopolize the attention of the professor; it was undignified, and would break up the orderly sequence of imparting knowledge. Jefferys replied, vigorously of course, and had a large following which grew steadily until Jefferys ran up against Jackson and asked him, in class, what he thought of the Socratic method. Jackson said when rightly understood it had its advantages, but that Jefferys had gotten things a trifle twisted. As applied by its inventor it consisted in the teacher questioning his students to find out how much they knew, and he offered to illustrate. The Socratics disappeared from that day. This year the Chess Club was founded by members of Seventy-nine and Eighty and this year, too, was established, mainly through the efforts of Jefferys, a branch of the Intercollegiate Literary Association, which aimed to accomplish what has recently been brought about in the shape of intercollegiate literary contests, but failed.

In senior year Seventy-nine governed the college wisely. In the societies and in the Class politics were active and the Fraternities opposed each other and made "deals" and "combinations" and so afforded a useful part of the training gained in college, as they always do. Colket published the first Pennsylvania college song book. Three of the Class, as already noted, rowed in the first Childs Cup Race, which did more than any other single event to establish Pennsylvania as an athletic college. Lee kicked a goal against Princeton which was a wonderful achievement in itself and a veritable prodigy for Pennsylvania in those days. We graduated forty-one, then the largest class on record, and separated after four very pleasant, profitable years.

Let this brief outline serve to introduce the records of what has happened since. The intimate daily association ended twenty years ago, but many friendships were formed then which have grown stronger from year to year. Loyalty to Pennsylvania, and pride in the Class are universal among us, and the feeling that the foundations of whatever success we have attained were laid in those four years.

The success has been gratifying. No class has given as many men to the service of the University as Seventy-nine. Six of the Class have belonged to the teaching bodies, and of these two have held the Deanships of the College and of the Department of Philosophy and one of these has been Vice-Provost. One of the Class has been Treasurer of the University. Four have been members of the Central Committee of the Alumni. Many have been officers or directors of the various organizations associated with her interests. Many have given liberally to her needs in proportion to their ability, and some have been able to give largely.

In their various pursuits the members of Seventy-nine have achieved at least a fair measure of success, and on the whole the brief sketches which follow will furnish pleasant reading to those for whom they are intended. Some are unfortunately incomplete because every effort has failed to reach the men; a very few are imperfect because the efforts of the committee met with no response; a few could be enlarged by the statement of facts which it is better to leave in friendly oblivion, but these are very few indeed, and altogether we may turn over these pages with a sense of satisfaction that our names are entered on the roll of the Class of Seventy-nine.

GEORGE S. FULLERTON.

FULLERTON, George Stuart, clergyman and professor, son of the Reverend Robert Stuart and Martha (White) Fullerton, was born in Futtehgurh, India, August 18, 1859. He entered the Department of Arts in 1875 and was graduated A. B., 1879, and A. M., 1882; B. D., Yale, 1883, and Ph. D. (honorary), Muhlenberg, 1892. He was Class Poet. After graduation he pursued post-graduate studies in theology and philosophy at Princeton, 1879, and at Yale, 1880-83. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He was licensed in the Presbyterian Church, afterwards ordained into the ministry of the Episcopal Church. In 1883 he returned to the University as Instructor in Philosophy and was subsequently, 1885-87, Adjunct Professor, and 1887, to date, Professor of Philosophy; 1889-90, Dean of the Department of Philosophy; 1894-96, Dean of the College and Vice-Provost of the University; 1896-98, Vice-Provost of the University.

In his Annual Report, 1898, the Provost says "On assuming the office of Provost, and for the four years of my administration, I was greatly helped by the wise counsel and loyal assistance of the Vice-Provost of my own nomination, the Rev. George S. Fullerton. I have all along been aware that in rendering this assistance in administration work Professor Fullerton was making large sacrifices of the thought and strength which rightly belonged to his Chair, and to the well-chosen life work to which he is so adapted. I was therefore not surprised although I deeply regretted it, when he tendered his resignation last March, and at the same time applied for a long leave of absence for recuperation and refreshing study. His services as Vice-Provost have been of great and enduring value to the University, and will be long remembered. We hope to welcome him back to the duties of his Chair at the beginning of the next Academic year, invigorated and ripened by his sojourn abroad, and that for many years to come he may adorn the position which he seems to have logically inherited from his own great teacher, some time also Vice-Provost, the Rev. Dr. Krauth."

He was, in 1896, president of the American Psychological Association. He is a member of the American Philosophical Society. He has published: Preliminary Report of the Seybert Commission on Spiritualism; The Conception of the Infinite; A Plain Argument for God; On Sameness and Identity; The Philosophy of Spinoza; On the Perception of Small Differences (with James McKeen Cattell); besides numerous articles and addresses mostly on philosophical and educational topics or in relation to the University of Pennsylvania. He is a member of the University Club of Philadelphia.

He married (1) in Alexandria, Va., January 26, 1884, Rebekah Daingerfield Smith, who died May 5, 1892; and (2) in Philadelphia, March 8, 1897, Julia Winslow Dickerson. He has no children.

"AOMONOUCHI, NIHONBASHIKU,
TOKIO, JAPAN, Sept. 17th, 1898.

J. M. GEST, ESQ.

Dear Sir,—Your latest favor of the 23rd July is at hand. I have much to apologize you for not replying promptly your communications. I will not mention here any causes for my long silence. I should rather bear all the blames for having dropped all my interest in the class affairs. You will at least find out by this note that I am still living. Since last year, I am undertaking various new schemes, none of them yet comes to bear fruit. It is my never changing wish that I should revisit the 'Glorious America' and see my old classmates again, but I must come to your country with something to tell you.

Enclosed you will find my photo lately art-typed, you will see me in it dressed in court uniform.

With my best wishes to you and to my classmates I am, Dear Mr. Gest,

Yours very truly,

JEFFERYS, Henry Scott, clergyman, son of William Henry and Maria Susan (Scott) Jefferys, was born in Clarksboro, Gloucester County, New Jersey, June 15,

HENRY S. JEFFERYS.

1853. He entered the Department of Arts in 1874 in the Class of 1878, was the Bowl-man of that class and until the close of his college course vigorously opposed the bowl-fight, printing a pamphlet against it in 1875 and attacking it in the University Magazine, but, as he writes in 1898, "failed to break up the barbarous custom." On account of his father's illness he was obliged to leave college for one year and on his return entered the Class of 1879 at the beginning of junior year, and was graduated A. B., 1879 and A. M., 1882. After graduation he took post-graduate instruction in the University in history, social science and metaphysics, and he has passed his examination in the Japanese language, colloquial. He was ordained deacon in 1879 and priest in 1880. In 1879 he was curate of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church, and in 1880 of Epiphany Chapel, Philadelphia; in 1881 of St. Matthew's Church and School, San Mateo, in 1883 of Trinity Church, San Francisco, and in 1885 of St. Paul's, Los Angeles, California. He founded four missions and built three churches in California and in 1887-88 was editor of the Apostolic Churchman, published at Los Angeles. In 1889 he went as a missionary to Japan, founded St. Matthias's Church, Mayebashi Joshiu, was professor of Latin and History in the Keiyogijaku University, 1891, and in Zoshikwan, Satsuma, founded Christ Church, Sendai, N. E. Japan, 1894, and in 1898 was the only priest of the Japan Church between Tokio and Hirosaki, over 500 miles. He has been a member of the Yu Do Kwai ethical club and Soldiers' Club, and is a member of the Japanese Red Cross Society. He has published in Japanese a tract on the Resurrection of Christ and many newspaper and magazine articles, mostly in Japanese. He writes: "The motto of the Class 'To the Front' has sunk into my heart and I have tried not to waste my weakness on anything aside from my vocation as a missionary. This in addition to my well-known incapacity will account for the blanks in the record. Some people say that I am 'erratic.' My record appears to show this fact, but be it remembered that since 1882 I have had my soul fixed upon Japan, and although there were many adversaries from my Bishop (Rest his soul!) down, by the blessing of God I am here and I hope to have my bones rest here. Put that in my obituary.

"In answer to 16 I enclose a catechism translated under my editorship. It is now out of print. The Apology of Socrates and Crito were translated in epitome at my suggestion by Mr. Chikami Kyoshi, then Vice Principal of the Zoshikwan, Kagoshima, Satsuma, and now Governor of this Prefecture.

"I also committed the sin of not consulting either the Revd. Geo. S. Fullerton or his publishers, but got the Tract Society here to publish his 'Plain Argument for the Being of God.' The translation work is being done under the editorship of Rev. T. T. Alexander a Cumberland Presbyterian and a thinner man than I am but a better—only a cannibal would differ from me.

"I have had translated 'A Primer of Ethics' by B. B. Comegys, Esq., with his permission and help—and if that translator don't hurry up and get it done I shall be forced to do a good deal of the work myself.

"My literary labors mostly consist in laying out work for other men and badgering them to finish it.

"If I think a thing ought to be done and I cannot tease or bully some one else into doing it, I put my hand to the wheel, but I can't claim all the credit for the present literary activity in Japan. We all help along by little shoves here and there often repeated.

"The fact is with a population thick as flies, with cranky subordinates, who think 'the tail should wag the dog,' it's pretty hard to find much time for side shows—the main circus demands all our attention.

"Pardon the prolixity of this epistle and send me a 'Matriculate Catalogue of 1894' (Draw on Treasurer as above) to keep me quiet until the 'Record' is out. Love to all the old boys.

As ever yours,

Heartily
HENRY S. JEFFERYS."

He entered the Towne Scientific School in 1877 as a special student in junior and left during senior year. He was a chemist, and from 1881 until his death was Assistant Secretary and Superintendent of the Phosphor-Bronze Smelting Company of Philadelphia. He was joint author of "Hallo, My Fancy," "The Septameron," etc. In the editorial note introducing four of his poems in the Century Magazine for April, 1891, it is said of him, "Of the younger American poets he was one whose gift was developing in a distinctly individual direction. He had an intense love for Nature in all her moods, and his work shows how studiously he regarded her, and how intimately he knew her. His poems were purely lyrical, and frequently possessed a delicate idyllic quality peculiarly his own. A few pieces in blank verse are strongly imaginative and rich in imagery. He was a careful workman, slow to trust in the worth of what he produced, eager and glad for criticism, and ever striving to attain perfection in his art. Of the poems printed here, 'The Four Winds' was his favorite. His work—and there is enough of it for a small book—is characterized by purity of thought, depth of feeling, fidelity to truth, and a melodiousness akin to the music of brooks. In these respects it is like his own manliness, sweetness of disposition, and sunniness of mind, of which the memory is fragrant and lasting."

And in the same magazine after four of Lüders' poems is the following, by Frank Dempster Sherman:

"CHARLES HENRY LÜDERS.

(Died January 21, 1891.)

"He is not dead to me, nor can be so;
For interwoven with the songs he made
The living soul remains and shall not fall,
But shine forever with a changeless glow,

Thus when I read, the face I used to know
Shall come again with smiles from out the shade,
And I shall feel upon my shoulder laid
His hand, and hear his dear voice speaking low.

"Alas! with all these memories of him,
I cannot cheat my sorrow of the truth—
The bell has rung, and Death has shut the door;

But, like a star beyond the shadows dim
That weave the night, shines this pure soul of youth
Among the souls of poets evermore!"

After his death a collection of his poems made by several of his friends was published under the title "The Dead Nymph and other Poems."

*WHARTON, Thomas, author, son of Henry (Class of 1846) and Katherine Johnstone (Brinley) Wharton, was born in Philadelphia, August 1, 1859, died in Philadelphia, April 3, 1896. He entered the Department of

WILLIAM WALTER WEBB.

THOMAS WHARTON.

Arts in 1876 in sophomore year and was graduated A. B., 1879, and A. M., 1882. After graduation he studied law, was admitted to the Philadelphia Bar in 1881 and after practicing for a short time and being connected with the legal department of the Land Title and Trust Company, 1885-88, gave himself entirely to literary work. He became connected with the Philadelphia Times in 1888, and at the time of his death was editor of its Sunday edition. He published: A Latter Day Saint; Hannibal of New York; Bobbo, and Other Fancies; and numerous poems and sketches. He is represented in the "Library of the World's Best Literature," where an extract from "Bobbo" is introduced by a sketch of Wharton by Owen Wister which is reproduced by permission of author and publisher:

"As one looks back upon the life of Thomas Wharton, the good name of those from whom he sprung, the distinction which after many years of promise he had begun to win for himself, it grows clearer than ever that a talent of a rare kind, with rare advantages of inheritance, is lost to American letters; a talent of charm, of grace, of winning fancy, that in these literal, half-ugly days can ill be spared. With many honorable generations in his blood, Thomas Wharton came by right to pluck, subtlety, humor, and brilliant powers of acquisition. Among Philadelphia lawyers, the names of both his father and grandfather remain traditional for scholarship. One other birth-right—namely, length of days—might have been his; and persuaded that it was to be, he labored steadily, cheerfully, and in no haste; believing that success would come to him all the more ripe and sure for his patience. But even middle age was denied him. Born August 1st, 1859, he died April 3rd, 1896, full of plans and work, letters from theatre managers and composers in his desk, books and plays in his mind beyond what was signed for by actual contract at the moment; a man of thirty-seven but at heart forever a boy, with his eyes beholding the first visions of worldly reward.

“Three periods he knew: a beginning full of hope, a middle full of struggle undaunted and courageous disappointment, and a brief end when the rays of true recognition began to shine upon him.

“Before he was fifteen, he brought home from his first year at Hellmuth College, near London, Ont., five prizes; and to crown these, the medal given that year by the Governor-General for the highest average marks. In those days he also scribbled copiously, verse and prose, but verse the more; and his art with words was already light and happy far beyond the common. He first appeared in print then, with an ode of Horace put into English verse; and at twenty-one he was in the Atlantic Monthly with more verses, entitled ‘Archæology.’ By inheritance a scholar, but himself robust in fibre, fond of swimming, and of cricket, and of life, he did not sustain his prize-winning eminence at the University of Pennsylvania. There he was graduated in 1879; with no array of honors, but like his father, knowing and loving well the things that he knew. From all the shelves—Attic, Augustan, Romance, Renaissance, through Shakespeare, Molière, and Heine, to Mark Twain—he pulled the books down and rejoiced in them. His knowledge of what man has written mellowed his judgment, seasoned his imagination, and preserved him from those errors of taste and theory that waylay so many genuine but half-educated talents in our country.

“The law was Thomas Wharton’s hereditary, logical, but inappropriate choice of career. After a few years his talent revolted, the inevitable crushed the conventional, and he became out-and-out writer. In 1888 he went upon the editorial staff of the Philadelphia Times, and was Sunday editor when he died. Dangerous for the clever ignorant, it was beneficent for him, this swift journalism,—compelling the scholar to be himself, to take up his scholarship and walk. Until now, neither his matter nor his manner had been quite his own. To look at his articles and stories in Lippincott’s Magazine and in Puck, and especially his clever novels, ‘A Latter-Day Saint’ and ‘Hannibal of New York,’ is to see a genuine gift often misdirected. From the novels turn to ‘Bobbo,’ and in a flash the true final Wharton stands revealed. This is what the gods made him for: weaver of fancies, rainbow-colored whims, dreams away from the jangle of life, through which life’s pathos and humor and tenderness should delicately play. Had the word gem with us Americans not been thumbed out of all critical meaning, ‘Bobbo’ should be called a gem. Its light completely radiates from a form complete.

“Wharton attained this through his newspaper work, and side work of verses and fantastic texts for operas. The newspaper made him master of his scholarship instead of being mastered by it, and set free his fancy. From Charlemagne’s paladins, from the teocalli of Montezuma, from Paris Streets as Villon knew them, he brought fancies, and more fancies, verse and prose ever finer tempered,—the spontaneity shining even brighter through the chiseled language. It is wholesome knowledge that he was a civilized college-bred American, dwelling quite at home; that cultivation made valuable his gift; that he did not believe rawness to be symptom of originality. Certainly, for our pleasure and his rare example, we can ill spare him. So many of us seem born mere observers, with all the note-making apparatus—but no wings!”

He was unmarried.

Vigintennial Dinner

On May 16th, 1879, public announcement was made on Class Day that the twentieth annual re-union of the Class of 1879 would be held in the United Universities Club. When the Club came to be established some years later the name was shortened, but the re-union was held as announced on May 18th, 1899, at the University Club of Philadelphia.

There were present Boulton, J. D. Brown, Claxton, Day, Dechert, Dick, Gest, Graham, Hance, Hart, Kennedy, Leaming, McCall, Montgomery, C. W. Nevin, W. L. Nevin, Nichols, Read, Reath, Roberts, Rommel, W. M. Stewart, Walton and Wayland. H. L. Jayne, Kinley and Newbold had accepted but were unable to attend.

Dr. Stillé, Professor Jackson, Dr. Barker and Dr. Smith (those of the present Faculty who were of the Faculty in our undergraduate days) having been invited to be present, Dr. Stillé declined, Dr. Smith accepted but was too modest to appear in his new dignity as Vice Provost before a Class which welcomed him as an Assistant in 1876, Professor Jackson and Professor Barker were present and both expressed pleasure in again meeting, collectively, the members of Seventy-nine. Their presence added very much to the pleasure of the members, and Dr. Barker's graceful words of good feeling broadened through a comparison of conditions "then and now" into an eloquent account of the recent victories of Science and a prophecy of her coming triumphs, which was highly appreciated.

The Chairman of the Committee read the following letter :

"2201 ST. JAMES' PLACE,
May 9, 1899.

Dear Mr. Gest,—There are many reasons why I should accept the kind and gratifying invitation of the Class of '79 to dine with them on the twentieth anniversary of their completing their college work. But my health has suffered a great deal of late, and this should sufficiently excuse my absence.

I recall well the year 1879 and my connexion at that time with the University. It was the first year when I looked forward to gathering some of the fruits of a somewhat new system of instruction which I had adopted, and I felt that the young men of that class were preparing for a new, and as I fondly hoped, a better training than had before prevailed, but circumstances changed the condition of affairs, and so far as college was concerned, I was unable to prove my theory to my satisfaction. But as to the work these young men have done in the world, of the credit they have done their Alma Mater by that work, I have no reason to be disappointed. I send to all of you my kindest and sincerest good wishes, and my earnest hope that your future may be as the past has been, a credit to the University, as well as a source of pride to those who have shared in your instruction.

With regards,

Very sincerely yours,

C. J. STILLÉ.

JOHN M. GEST, ESQ."

The Chairman was requested to convey to Dr. Stillé on behalf of the Class acknowledgments and good wishes.

During the evening announcement was made of the endowment by Evans R. Dick of a Scholarship in the University in memory of Vice Provost Ezra Otis Kendall, in the name of the Class of 1879.

President Nichols referred briefly to the varied careers of our representatives in poetry, fiction, theology, education, science, law, medicine, finance, commerce and the drama. There were many informal speeches, and Dr. Barker's suggestion that the end of the next twenty years be celebrated by a similar re-union was unanimously adopted, upon his promising to attend.
